

Steve Waddell – PhD, MBA

Steve focuses upon large systems change and global networks. The issues may be as broad as trade, poverty and sustainable development, or as specific as road-building, youth employment, banking and provision of water and sanitation services. Usually the change strategy involves creating business-government-civil society collaborations and networks; these collaborations may be local, national or global.

Research and consulting clients have included foundations and agencies such as the Ford, International Youth and MacArthur Foundations, the World Bank and the United States Agency for International Development. Sometimes Steve works with business-government and civil society collaborations such as the Global Reporting Initiative, The Access Initiative and Business Partners for Development; for non-governmental organizations such as CARE and Mvula Trust; and with government such as the Government of Canada and the State of Massachusetts.

Steve is Executive Director of the Global Action Network Net (www.gan-net), Senior Associate at Strategic Clarity and the Institute for Strategic Clarity, an adjunct faculty member innovative executive management program he founded at Boston College, and Associate of the Center for Innovation in Management at Simon Fraser University in Vancouver.

Dozens of journal articles and book chapters by Steve have been published in English and Spanish. Greenleaf is publishing a book by Waddell titled Societal Learning and Change: Innovation with Multi-Stakeholder Strategies. Steve has a doctorate in sociology and an MBA. Publications are available through www.thecollaborationsworks.com and www.gan-net.net.
