

Bio - Jennifer Swanberg

Jennifer's early career was in the field of mental health services, where she served as Program Director at Massachusetts Mental Health Centre, an Adolescent Rehabilitation Specialist at McLean Hospital in Belmont, MA, and had a private practice in Occupational Therapy. During the past two decades she has held a number of academic positions in the eastern United States. Jennifer has acted as a research consultant or research associate at Boston University, Columbia University, Brandeis University, the United Way of Massachusetts and Families and Work Institute, New York. Her faculty positions have included Assistant Professor, Adjunct Status, at City University of New York and Adjunct Faculty at Wheelock College in Boston.

Jennifer has a PhD in Social Welfare Policy from Brandeis University, Waltham, Massachusetts and her Doctoral Dissertation was on Job Family Role Strain. Many of her numerous publications have focused on family and the work place. She is presently Assistant Professor of Social Work at the College of Social Work, University of Kentucky.

